MANAGER'S COMMENT

Waste management is one of today's hot topics. Recycling is more popular compared to the traditional method (disposal in landfills and incineration), largely due to EU regulations and consumers' preference for more environmentally-friendly approaches. Belgium is one of the top-three best in class in Europe, with 38% of the country's waste being recycled. France, however, is significantly behind with only 22%, and for this reason the French government has set a target to reduce by half the waste landfilled and incinerated by 2025. La Foncière verte - a family-owned firm - is a real estate company that owns and manages green assets that are leased to Paprec, the leading recycling company in France (which represents 88% of its rental revenues). In this specific case dependence on a major tenant is not a large risk as there are not enough recycling sites to face demand. The two other players (Sita and Veolia) would jump at the opportunity to rent a site. The fact is that these two players started developing their recycling businesses later, and it can take more than two to eight years before obtaining authorisation to start operations because a site must meet environmental standards. Thanks to those specific requirements, the rental return yields on the assets are more profitable than for traditional real estate. La Foncière verte will benefit from the underlying growth trend for the recycling industry. In order to enable participation in this growth, the current loan-to-value of the assets will temporarily increase to 55%, which is a conservative figure. The fund has a small exposure to this company.
