MANAGER'S COMMENT

During the month of September, the fund initiated a new position in Univar Solutions, one of the world's largest distributors of chemicals and ingredients. Univar stock was severely impacted during the COVID-19 induced market correction and has only barely recovered since. In the meantime, the business has held up relatively well and the valuation has therefore become highly attractive. The reasons for this attractive entry point are twofold. First, as a chemical distributor, Univar suffers from a perception of cyclicality, whereas effectively its profits are much less volatile than is the case for chemical producers. During the downturn of 2009, the maximum drop in earnings amounted to 12%, which was very resilient in the face of a global recession. This was confirmed in the second quarter of this year, as earnings dropped only 11% in a world where most of the supply chains were effectively frozen. Secondly, Univar carries debt on its balance sheet which rightly scares off some investors. However, the business has generated free cash flow in each of the last 15 years and therefore has ample deleveraging capability. Furthermore, none of its debt matures before 2024, so the company has plenty of leeway to deleverage and adapt its balance sheet. Applying a conservative multiple to Univar's through-the-cycle earnings yields a share price significantly above today's depressed level.
